Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****.Excerpt from Darwinism, Medical Progress and Eugenics: The Cavendish Lecture, 1912, an Address to the Medical Profession Mr. President, Gentlemen, - I confess to strangely mixed feelings in venturing as a layman to stand up and address you - a professional audience - to-night. When I look through the long list of names borne by those who have, during more than a quarter of a century, given the Cavendish Lecture, I find all that is best in English Medical Science represented, and more than one foreign authority of world-wide repute. Your lecturers have been men known not only within the medical profession, but men who have won the confidence of a wide lay public by the extent and efficiency of their labours for general social welfare. It must appear presumption on my part to stand on this platform and break - if it be only for a single occasion - that flow of wide medical and surgical experience which has been placed before you annually for more than twenty-five years. It seems to me that I have before me the very serious task of justifying not only my acceptance of this post, but also your Council's invitation to a layman, who is not only a layman. - i.e. a man without medical training - but is held by more than one distinguished leader in your profession to criticise without knowledge more than one accepted medical truth. I am quite clear, however, that the suggestion conveyed by your Council's invitation and my own inclinations would lead me on this occasion to give a wide berth to these controversies.
